The works focus on multi-layered and often intertwining meanings and relations of body, land, memory and mapping; a response to diasporic flows, control and statehood, and the invisibility of various underrepresented groups and individuals. They 'mine various contested dualities, including place and space, the 'native' and the 'other', the whole and the partial to elucidate a metaphorical state of liminality, neither here nor there, but rather existing in an in-between space.

This series embodies metanarratives of identity in relation to geographic contextualisation and conversely, decontextualization.
